ACT TWO

Well who would have thought it? 11 years of Youth Workshop productions? It really is hard to believe that this is the 11th year and the fourth time we have presented a cornucopia of items devised and imagined during workshop sessions. Jumbalastic, (well even the name had to be dreamt up by one of our talented team), is such a feast. What is more amazing is that a number of the older members here started as 6 year olds in the Junior Workshop, including this production's stage manager Mark 'Parsley' Webb.

We continue to grow and thrive, and most of you will know we have now relocated regular workshop sessions to the 'Millennium Arches' where we have the space to cope with numbers. We hope also that during the run you will take time to look at the model of the proposed Theatre enlargement plans situated in the foyer. The Archway Theatre Company will vote on taking this project forward during the next month and we look forward to a positive outcome to be able to increase the facilities for our Youth Workshop.

I would like to take this opportunity to say thank you to our leaders, helpers, parents and all members that actively support the Workshop, as without your continued support we would not have such a thriving vibrant group. I should add a special thank you to those parents who have taken on the role of Chaperone to look after any of the youngsters involved in any of the productions at the Archway Theatre.

Jacquie Redfern—Youth Workshop leader.
